Many Californians under new pandemic curbs; New York readies fresh restrictions

LOS ANGELES/NEW YORK (Reuters) - Much of California on Monday faced a raft of new restrictions aimed at slowing the spread of COVID-19, while a ban on indoor restaurant dining loomed in New York City as the United States braced for another surge during the upcoming holidays. The order issued on Thursday by California Governor Gavin Newsom which does not immediately cover the entire state, kicked in at the regional level in places where fewer than 15% of intensive-care hospital beds remain available.

It is currently in effect throughout Southern California and the state's San Joaquin Valley breadbasket. Jurisdictions in the state's heavily populated San Francisco Bay Area have imposed similar orders on their own. Combined, these three areas cover about three-quarters of the state's nearly 40 million people.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, the U.S. government's top infectious disease expert, said on Monday that the state's action will "rescue them from possibly getting their hospitals overrun."

In reporting more than 30,000 new cases on Sunday, the state exceeded its previous high of 21,986 set on Friday, and notched a record high for hospitalized COVID-19 patients as well.

Nationwide, COVID-19 infections are at their peak with an average of 193,863 new cases reported each day over the nast week according to a Reuters tally of official data.

There have been 14.7 million confirmed infections and more than 282,000 coronavirus-related deaths reported in the United States since the pandemic began, the most in the world.

California's order, due to last at least three weeks, bans private gatherings of any size in affected areas, shuts all but critical infrastructure and retail operations, and requires everyone to wear a mask and maintain physical distancing.

The sheriffs of Los Angeles, Orange and Riverside counties have said they would not enforce the order.

NEW YORK RESTRICTIONS LOOM In New York, Governor Andrew Cuomo said the state would tie any new restrictions to hospitalization rates in an effort to avoid a repeat of last spring when the state was at the epicenter of the pandemic in the United States.

Cuomo said he would suspend indoor dining at New York City restaurants as soon as Monday if hospitalizations continue on their upward trajectory. At the end of September, restaurants resumed serving meals to diners seated inside at 25% of capacity.

Cuomo floated the possibility of a broad shut down of non-essential businesses across the state like one imposed in the spring if its hospitals become overwhelmed, though he said the current situation was not dire enough to warrant

"If you are at a rate that is going to overwhelm your hospitals, you must shut down," he added.

Restaurants in other regions of the state could face stricter restrictions also if hospitalization trends worsen.

Other non-essential businesses in New York City, such as beauty parlors and retail, would not be affected, Cuomo said. Meanwhile, the city's school system - the country's largest - welcomed back up to 190,000 of its 1.1 million students this week after a two-week shutdown.

In another move to avoid a critical shortage of beds, New York state health officials will order hospitals to increase their capacity by 25% and ask retired Cuomo said

CORONAVIRUS DIARY Wealee@scdaily.com

My Diplomat Dream

It was many years ago when I was a college student in Taiwan as a major in diplomacy that my big dream was to become a diplomat, but my whole career was later focused on the mass communication media business.

But it just so happened that in September of last year, we had the honor to host a welcome party for the West African country of Guinea's president, His Excellency Alpha Conde and more than thirty of his cabinet ministers.

During the reception, President Conde asked me to serve as Guinea's Honorary Consul to Houston. I was quite surprised his offer and immediately accepted his offer. Later this year, in July 2020, I received a diplomatic notice from the U.S. State Department from Guinea's Ambassador in Washington, D.C., H.E. Kerfalla Yansane, with approval of my appointment as Guinea' s Honorary Consul In Houston. That night I was so excited I could not sleep. Suddenly I remembered that when I was just eleven years old, I had to go to the city from our village to attend middle school. When my dad left me at the school, I cried and didn't want to let him go. Many years later I had to go to work and when I was in college, my life changed to different stage. I then spent all my career time in the media business and never thought about becoming a diplomat again.

Ambassador Yansane has now called me and he will sponsor a virtual seminar titled, "U.S.-Guinean Opportunities & Introduction Of The New Honorary Consul In Texas." He will formally introduce me to the general public and business community during this event.

In the meantime, we will cover topics including Trade and Investment, Agriculture, Tourism, Healthcare and Education.

This workshop will also provide the platform to gain insight and update information about Guinea.

It is such an honor and responsibility to serve in the consular position. I will definitely do my best to promote good relations between Texas and Africa.

This is my dream come true.

WH Coronavirus Task Force: States Must "Flatten The Curve" To Sustain Health System

A walk-up Covid-19 testing site in San Fernando, California, on Nov. 24, ahead of the Thanksgiving holiday.

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, Southern Daily Editor

The White House coronavirus task force warned states "the COVID risk to all Americans is at a historic high" and to brace for another surge following Thanksgiving, per a report that emerged last Wednesday.

Driving the news: "If you are under 40, you need to assume you became infected during the Thanksgiving period if you gathered beyond your immediate household," said the report, dated Nov. 29, first published by the Center for Public Integrity.

"Most likely, you will not have symptoms; however, you are dangerous to others and you must isolate away from anyone at increased risk for severe disease and get tested immediately."

The report states that people who are over age 65 or have significant health conditions "should not enter any indoor public spaces where anyone is unmasked due to the immediate risk to your health; you should have groceries and medications delivered."

Why it matters: The warning is in contrast to the messaging of President Trump and some members of his administration, with invitations to White House holiday parties hosted by the Trumps sent out last month. • "We are in a very dangerous place due to the current, extremely high COVID baseline and limited hospital capacity; a further post-Thanksgiving surge will compromise COVID patient care, as well as medical care overall," per the report.

• On Wednesday, over 100,200 Americans were hospitalized with COVID-19 for the first time since the outbreak began in early 2020.

The bottom line: The report warns "all states and all counties must flatten the curve now in order to sustain the health system for both COVID and non-COVID emergencies."

"If state and local policies do not reflect the seriousness of the current situation, all public health officials must alert the state population directly." (Courtesy axios.com)

Hackers Are Going After COVID-19 Vaccine's Rollout

tors who will be distributing and storing vaccines for the coronavirus pandemic

KEY POINTS

Big game hunting (BGH) escalated, and ransom demands soared into the millions, causing unparalleled disruption.

Cybercriminals are weaponizing sensitive data to increase pressure on ransomware victims.

The eCrime ecosystem continues to evolve, mature and develop increasing specialization.

Hackers aren't just looking to steal information on the vaccines for COVID-19 -they're also going after its distribution and suppliers, security researchers warned in a report released on Thursday. Researchers from IBM's X-Force team detailed a global hacking campaign targeting government agencies, tech companies and energy suppliers in countries like Germany. Italy, South Korea and Taiwan.

The companies and government agencies are all connected to the Cold Chain Equipment Optimization Platform (CCEOP), a partnership between UNICEF, Gavi the Vaccine Alliance and other organizations to help with vaccine distributions.

hacking campaign posed as a cold storage container company. Pfizer's vaccine needs to be stored at extremely low temperatures.

The attacks came as emails pretending to be from Haier Biomedical, a Chinese company that says it's the world's only complete cold chain provider. The cold chain is a crucial part of the Pfizer's COVID-19 vaccine rollout as it needs to Celsius (-94 degrees Fahrenheit).

Haier Biomedical is working CCEOP, the World Health Organization and the United Nations to help with the COVID-19 vaccine's rollout, and the hackers sent emails to targets asking for price quotes, IBM's researchers said. The emails contained a malicious attachment that would ask people to enter their passwords to view the files, which the hackers would steal. It's unclear if any of the attacks were successful, but the purpose was likely to gather information for future attempts, IBM's researchers said. "Moving laterally through networks and remaining there in stealth would allow them to conduct cyber espionage and collect additional confidential information from the victim environments for future operations," Claire Zaboeva, a cyber threat analyst at IBM's X-Force and co-author of the report, said.

The hacking targets included the European Commission's Directorate-General for Taxation and Customs Union, who would be in direct contact with several countries and could open pathways for more targeted attacks. The hackers also sent malware-laced emails to companies making solar panels, which provide power for cold storage containers in countries without access to electricity, and IT companies in South Korea and Germany who support pharmaceutical manufacturers.

"A breach within any part of this global alliance could result in the exposure of numerous partner computing environments worldwide," IBM's researchers said.

The report didn't indicate who was behind this hacking campaign, but suggested that The cyberattacks are targeting distribu be stored at a temperature of -70 degrees it's likely a nation-state behind it because of how sophisticated the targeting is. In recent months, countries like China, Russia and North Korea have launched cyberattacks against pharmaceutical companies developing COVID-19 vaccines.

IBM Warns Hackers Targeting COVID-19 Vaccine Operations

In a blog post released Thursday, IBM said it had uncovered a phishing plot targeting "organizations associated with a COVID-19 cold chain," referring to the chain of people and businesses responsible for storing the vaccine at the necessary cold temperatures. The U.S. Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency shared the report Thursday along with a warning to anyone involved in operations related to the vaccine.

"The Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) encourages Operation Warp Speed (OWS) organizations and organizations involved in vaccine storage and transport to review the IBM X-Force report," its post read.

On Wednesday, the Wall Street Journal reported that North Korean hackers have targeted at least six pharmaceutical companies on the US, UK and South Korea that have been working on COVID-19 vaccines. The US's Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency released a statement on the hacking campaign, urging companies involved with COVID-19 vaccines to review IBM's report. Tourists Still Flock To Big Bend And The Marfa Lights As Packed Hospitals Run Out Of Overflow Options

Coronavirus Is Ablaze In Popular West Texas

The splendor and natural beauty of Big Bend National Park still attracts large crowds even during the pandemic.

Key Point

Presidio and Brewster counties, home to the popular tourist destinations, along with nearby Culberson County, lead the state in cases per 1,000 residents in the last two weeks. All of West Texas is dealing with increasing numbers of COVID-19 cases while low on hospital beds.

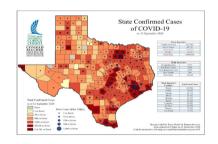

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, Southern Daily Editor

For Andrew Rubalcaba's 39th birthday, he wanted to get out of town — but he also wanted to be safe. So before Thanksgiving, he drove more than 500 miles west from his home in McKinney to visit Marfa and Big Bend National Park. The popular Texas tourist destinations were appealing in the midst of a still-raging pandemic because they are seemingly in the middle of nowhere. They're rural, sparsely populated, outdoorsy and now — overrun with visitors and saturated with COVID-19 cas-

"If only we knew the locals were saying don't come, definitely we would not have gone. We would not have gone out of respect for the local population," Rubalcaba

Presidio and Brewster counties, home to Big Bend Regional Medical Center,

Marfa and Big Bend, along with nearby Culberson County, lead the state in cases per 1,000 residents in the last two weeks, according to a Texas Tribune analysis. In fact, all of West Texas, including Jeff Davis, Hudspeth and El Paso counties, is ablaze with increasing COVID-19 cases and low on hospital located in Brewster County, has just 25 acute care beds. Culberson County's 2,200 residents have just Culberson Hospital, where there are 14 beds and two ventilators, but at least one doctor said she doesn't feel adequately prepared to use them. Patients in dire condition are often transferred from the small towns to regional hospitals in larger metropolitan areas. But those closest hospital systems in El Paso, Lubbock and Midland, which have more resources, are already struggling with their own influxes of local cases, leaving doctors and county officials worried a bump in cases from Thanksgiving gatherings will fill beds beyond capacity with nowhere left to send the sickest patients.

"It's unlikely we'd be able to help them at this point," said Ricardo Samaniego, the county judge of El Paso, where COVID-19 patients occupy more than 35% of hospital beds. Without El Paso as an option to send patients, nearby doctors and officials are scrambling.

"It's a scary feeling to have a critically ill patient with nowhere to go," said Gilda Morales, a Culberson County commissioner and doctor at Culberson Hospital.

The Marfa lights and spectacular scenery has drawn crowds to the area for decades.

She said that in recent weeks, the county has sent struggling patients to hospitals in San Antonio — more than 400 miles away — including Culberson County Judge Carlos Urias, who's been there for nearly four weeks. If a flood of residents need to be hospitalized quickly, and cases in San Antonio and other metropolitan areas swell, Culberson might not have the resources to treat everyone in need, Morales said. Hospitals across the West Texas region are "bumping capacity and stretched absolutely to the limit," said John Henderson, president of the Texas Organization of Rural and Community Hospitals. Administrators have struggled to find open beds, in some cases calling 15 or 20 facilities, he said.

"Everyone is headed the wrong direction," he said. "Every week is a little worse than the last one."

In Odessa and in neighboring Midland, the area's three hospitals serve as "referral centers," accepting patients from small-town facilities that are ill equipped to treat serious illnesses.

"All of our outlying facilities, they don't have ICUs or ventilators that can take care of patients long term," said Dr. Rohith Saravanan, chief medical officer of Odessa Regional Medical Center.

The hospital in recent weeks added 34 beds for people with COVID-19, and, as of Tuesday, only four were still empty. Scenic Mountain Medical Center in Big Spring is one of those outlying community hospitals. The facility's seven intensive care unit beds are full, as are 18 overflow beds that fill the hallways.

Fueled by tourism

Before Thanksgiving, cases and hospitalizations were already on the rise in the mostly rural region, and locals worried tourism and family gatherings would only make the hot spot worse. Yet even as cases of the coronavirus have ballooned, tourists from other parts of the state have continued to flock to the region's campsites and small communities, a worrying trend for local officials. In the tiny desert city and artistic hub of Marfa, tourism never slowed. People still flood the town's hotels and shops. It's a delicate situation for the town of 1,700, which has an economy that relies on tourism but has seen an explosion of COVID-19.

"Our community is fragile," said City Council member Raúl Lara. He buys groceries on Fridays after work and rarely leaves his house during weekends to avoid crowds. "It's a double-edged sword, because we live on tourism money and we die without it," Lara said.

Crowds continue to gather at Big Bend and other national parks during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Jeanine Bishop, the admin of the Facebook group Jeff Davis County News & Talk, also said tourism is a "double-edged sword." The county's 2,300 residents are forced to pick between tourism and potentially more COVID-19, or closed businesses and unemployment. This week, Bishop, who runs the Alpine Humane Society and a thrift shop, laid off all of her staff. As cases rise, she worries about unmasked customers entering her store. She feels powerless to stop what feels like an inevitable and sharp increase in cases as she watches more Texans vacation in the region while her community suffers the consequences. She said last weekend most customers at her store said they were from out of town. Bishop offered them a message: "Please don't. We're going to be devastated in two weeks."
