

If you would like to share news or information with our readers, please send the unique stories, business news organization events, and school news to us including your name and phone number in case more information is needed.

For news and information consideration, please send to News@scdaily.com or contact
John Robbins 281-965-6390

Publisher: Wea H. Lee
President: Catherine Lee
Editor: John Robbins

Address: 11122 Bellaire Blvd.,
Houston, TX 77072
E-mail: News@scdaily.com

Inside C2

Southern DAILY

Make Today Different

Southern Daily News is published by Southern News Group Daily

Wednesday, September 15 2021

U.S. inflation coming off the boil as prices increase slowly in August

WASHINGTON, Sept 14 (Reuters) - Underlying U.S. consumer prices increased at their slowest pace in six months in August as used motor vehicle prices tumbled, suggesting that inflation had probably peaked, though it could remain high for a while amid persistent supply constraints.

The broad slowdown in price pressures reported by the Labor Department on Tuesday aligns with Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell's long-held belief that high inflation is transitory. Still, economists cautioned it was too early to celebrate and expected the U.S. central bank to lay out plans in November to start scaling back its massive monthly bond-buying program.

"Inflation remains troublingly strong, even if it is not exploding like it did earlier in the year," said James McCann, deputy chief economist at Aberdeen Standard Investments in Boston. "If we continue to see further step-downs in inflation over the next six months, that should ease the pressure on the Fed to quickly follow tapering with interest rate rises."

The consumer price index excluding the volatile food and energy components edged up 0.1% last month. That was the smallest gain since February and followed a 0.3% rise in July.

The so-called core CPI was held back by a 1.5% decline in prices for used cars and trucks, which ended five straight monthly increases. Robust rises in prices of used cars and trucks, as well as services in industries worst affected by the COVID-19 pandemic, were the key drivers behind a heating up of inflation at the start of the year.

Airline fares plunged 9.1% in August, likely as a resurgence in infections, driven by the Delta variant of the coronavirus, sapped demand for air travel. There were also decreases in motor vehicle rentals and insurance.

In the 12 months through August, the core CPI increased 4.0% after advancing 4.3% in the 12 months through July. Economists polled by Reuters had forecast the core CPI would gain 0.3% for the month and increase 4.2% year-on-year.

Stocks on Wall Street were trading lower. The dollar (.DXY) fell against a basket of currencies. U.S. Treasury prices rose.

In addition to the price surge for used cars and trucks appearing to have run its course, hotel and motel accommodation prices are now above the pre-pandemic level, suggesting moderate gains ahead. Prices for hotels and motels accommodation fell 3.3% after shooting up 6.8% in July. Some of the price plunge was probably because of the soaring coronavirus infections.

Congressman Al Green Remarks on Patriot Day and National Day of Service and Remembrance 2021

(Houston, TX) – On Saturday, September 11, 2021, Congressman Al Green (TX-09) released the following statement:

"9/11 serves as a reminder that onto each person a watch is given. A reminder that this is our watch. A reminder that our mission is to protect the flame of freedom. Protect it from those who would smother flickers of hope with ashes of hate. Protect it from those who would extinguish precious embers of enlightenment with raging rivers of ignorance. Protect it from those who would suffocate the bright sparks of freedom with a dark blanket of servitude. On this day, some 20 years ago, the flame of freedom was under attack. On this day some 20 years ago, there were those who responded not on our watch."

Congressman Al Green – who spoke at various 9/11 remembrance ceremonies across the community today – went on, "They were the first responders who rushed in to save lives in the twin towers as others rushed out. They were the passengers on Flight United 93, a plane destined to take the lives of persons at the Capitol. Their response was not on our watch. They had to know that their lives would be lost. But their mantra was 'let's roll.' They had to know that they would never spend time with their wives, their husbands, their mothers, their fathers, their babies, their sisters, or their brothers, ever again. Yet, their mantra was 'let's roll.'"

In so doing, they, with great sacrifice, protected the flame of freedom and spared the lives of many. Today, I say to you America, 'let's roll.' Let's roll beyond the ignorance that engenders hate. Let's roll across the chasms that divide us. Let's roll onto the path of unity our nation found on 9/11 some 20 years ago when the flame

Lily Rodriguez, Press Secretary
Cell Phone: 202-430-0125
Email: lily.rodriguez@mail.house.gov

敬請關注我們的新媒體賬號

Follow us on social media

Southern News
美南新聞

公共頁
美南網

今日頭條
美國美南網

抖音
美國美南網

西瓜視頻
美國美南網

Facebook Page:
Southern News
美南新聞

Tik Tok ID:
Southern News
Group

Instagram ID:
Southern News

WEA LEE'S GLOBAL NOTES

CORONAVIRUS DIARY

09/14/2021

We Are Still Fighting A Common Enemy

According to a new survey, 86% of all Americans believe the pandemic isn't over yet. In the U.S. most people think the country hasn't even started to recover economically from the pandemic, with 41% saying that conditions are continuing to worsen.

On the school masks requirement, 63% of people believe that the children need to have masks on when they come to school, but 31% opposed it. This has also become a strong political issue today. The pandemic is so politicalized now that people will not listen to the experts.

60% of Republicans report that they are vaccinated and a sizable number are continuing to take coronavirus precautions.

There are many people who support keeping the option open to let people work at home, and doctors should keep the option open for telemedicine.

Today we are really facing many problems in our area. Last week we faced Hurricane IDA, and now we have another tropical storm Nicholas that is approaching Texas. Some Houston area school districts have already canceled classes due to the threat of severe weather posed by the storm.

In the last two years we all have suffered in this pandemic and natural disasters. The world is really "hanging on a hinge," and unless we can work together, we don't see any bright future ahead for the world.

Wea H. Lee
Wealee@scdaily.com

Chairman of International District Houston Texas

Publisher Southern Daily Wea H. Lee

Southern News Group Chairman / CEO
Chairman of International Trade & Culture Center
Republic of Guiana Honorary consul at Houston Texas

Southern DAILY Make Today Different

Editor's Choice

Former U.S. President George W. Bush attends an event commemorating the 20th anniversary of the September 11, 2001 attacks at the Flight 93 National Memorial in Stoystown, Pennsylvania. REUTERS/Evelyn Hockstein

The reflection of the One World trade Center is seen in Joe walker's sunglasses as he reacts during the 20th anniversary of the September 11, 2001 attacks in New York City. REUTERS/ Carlos Barria

U.S. President Joe Biden and first lady Jill Biden participate in a ceremony marking the 20th anniversary of the September 11, 2001 attacks in New York City. REUTERS/ Jonathan Ernst

U.S. Vice President Kamala Harris touches the Flight 93 National Memorial during an event commemorating the 20th anniversary of the September 11, 2001 attacks, in Stoystown, Pennsylvania. REUTERS/Evelyn Hockstein

Teachers welcome students with roses as schools reopen after the government withdrew restrictions on educational institutions following a decrease in the number of cases of coronavirus in Dhaka, Bangladesh. REUTERS/ Mohammad Ponir Hossain

Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck pose at the premiere screening of the film "The Last Duel" at the Venice Film Festival. REUTERS/Yara Nardi

Southern
DAILY Make
Today
Different

BUSINESS

Hispanics Are Dying At The Highest Rate

United States COVID-19 Deaths Now At 660,000

A portion of a mural, which displays images of people who have died of coronavirus disease (COVID-19), is seen in Joni Zavitsanos' art studio in Houston, Texas, as the country reaches 600,000 deaths. (Photo credit/REUTERS/Callaghan O'Hare.)

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, Southern Daily Editor

Jerry Ramos spent his final days in a California hospital, hooked to an oxygen machine with blood clots in his lungs from COVID-19, his 3-year-old daughter in his thoughts. "I have to be here to watch my princess grow up," the Mexican American restaurant worker wrote on Facebook. "My heart feels broken into pieces." Ramos didn't live to see it. He died Feb. 15 at age 32, becoming not just one of the nearly 600,000 Americans who have now perished in the coronavirus outbreak but another example of the outbreak's strikingly uneven and ever-shifting toll on the nation's racial and ethnic groups. The approaching 600,000 mark, as tracked by Johns Hopkins University, is greater than the population of Baltimore or Milwaukee. It is about equal to the number of Americans who died of cancer in 2019. And as bad as that is, the true toll is believed to be significantly higher. Last summer, during a second surge, Hispanics were hit the hardest, suffering an outsize share of deaths, driven by infections in Texas and Florida. By winter, during the third and most lethal stage, the virus had gripped the entire nation, and racial gaps in weekly death rates had narrowed so much that whites were the worst off, followed closely by Hispanics. Whites were the worst off, followed closely by Hispanics.

FILE - In this July 11, 2020, file photo, mourners carry out the remains of loved ones following the blessing of the ashes of Mexicans who died from COVID-19 at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York. Government health officials say Native Americans, Latinos and Black people are two to three times more likely than whites to die of COVID-19. (AP Photo/Eduardo Munoz Alvarez, File) President Joe Biden acknowledged the milestone Monday during his visit to Europe, saying that while new cases and deaths are dropping dramatically in the U.S., "there's still too many lives being lost," and "now is not the time to let our guard down." On the way to the latest round-number milestone, the virus has proved adept at exploiting inequalities in the U.S., according to an Associated Press data analysis. In the first wave of fatalities, in April 2020, Black people were slammed, dying at rates higher than those of other ethnic or racial groups as the virus rampaged through the urban Northeast and heavily African American cities like Detroit and New Orleans.

Now, even as the outbreak ebbs and more people get vaccinated, a racial gap appears to be emerging again, with Black Americans dying at higher rates than other groups. Overall, Black and Hispanic Americans have less access to medical care and are in poorer health, with higher rates of conditions such as diabetes and high blood pressure. They are also more likely to have jobs deemed essential, less able to work from home and more likely to live in crowded, multigenerational households, where working family members are apt to expose others to the virus.

Milestones Crossed In U.S.
COVID-19 Deaths

Cumulative deaths in the U.S. through the week ending:
June 13, 2021
100,000200,000300,000400,000500,000

NOTE: Weekly counts end on Sunday. The count for the most recent week will not be complete until Sunday. In Utah only the larger-population counties are reporting confirmed deaths; Smaller counties are banded together into county groups; Those counties are not shown in this map. Source: Johns Hopkins University CSSE (AP Photo Credit: NICKY FORSTER AND PHIL HOLM) Black people account for 15% of all COVID-19 deaths where race is known, while Hispanics represent 19%, whites 61% and Asian Americans 4%. Those figures are close to the groups' share of the U.S. population — Black people at 12%, Hispanics 18%, whites 60% and Asians 6% — but adjusting for age yields a clearer picture of the unequal burden.

Because Blacks and Hispanics are younger on average than whites, it would stand to reason that they would be less likely to die from a disease that has been brutal to the elderly.

In this April 22, 2020, file photo, pallbearers, who were among only 10 allowed mourners, walk the casket for interment at the funeral for Larry Hammond, who died from the coronavirus, at Mount Olivet Cemetery in New Orleans. Government health officials say Native Americans, Latinos and Black people are two to three times more likely than whites to die of COVID-19. (AP Photo/Gerald Herbert, File) But that's not what is happening. Instead, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, adjusting for population age differences, estimates that Native Americans, Latinos and Blacks are two to three times more likely than white people to die of COVID-19. Also, the AP analysis found that Latinos are dying at much younger ages than other groups. Thirty-seven percent of Hispanic deaths were of those under 65, versus 12% for white Americans and 30% for Black people. Hispanic people between 30 and 39 — like Ramos — have died at five times the rate of white people in the same age group. Public health experts see these disparities as a loud message that the nation needs to address deep-rooted inequities. "If we want to respect the dear price that 600,000 people have paid, don't return to normal. Return to something that is better than what was," said Dr. Clyde Yancy, vice dean for diversity and inclusion at Northwestern University's medical school in Chicago. He added: "It will be an epic fail if we simply go back to whatever we call normal."

Yolanda Ogbolu, a nurse researcher at the University of Maryland, Baltimore, who advocated for two relatives during their COVID-19 hospital stays, looks out a window at the university's nursing school on Friday, June 11, 2021, in Baltimore. (AP Photo/Steve Ruark) Yolanda Ogbolu, who is Black, made herself an advocate for two relatives during their COVID-19 hospital stays: her 50-year-old police officer brother — she persuaded his doctors to treat him with the drug remdesivir — and her 59-year-old repairman uncle. She called the hospital daily during his 100-day stay. Both survived. But Ogbolu wonders whether they would have lived if they hadn't had a nurse in the family. "What happens when people don't have that person to push for them? What happens when you don't even speak the language?" Ogbolu said. "What happens when they don't know how to navigate the health system or what questions to ask?" Ramos had asthma and diabetes and had quit his job as a chef at Red Lobster before the pandemic because of diabetes-related trouble with his feet. He died during the devastating winter surge that hit Latinos hard, and the rest of his household of seven in Watsonville, an agricultural city of around 54,000 people about 90 miles south of San Francisco, also got sick.

Laura Ramos holds a photo of her brother Jerry Ramos at her home in Watsonville, Calif., Sunday, June 6, 2021. He died Feb. 15 at age 32, becoming not just one of the roughly 600,000 Americans who have now perished in the outbreak but another example of the virus's strikingly uneven and ever-shifting toll on the nation's racial and ethnic groups. (AP Photo/Nic Coury) That included his toddler daughter; the family matriarch, 70-year-old Mercedes Ramos; and his girlfriend, who was the only one in the household working and the first to get infected, bringing home the virus from her job managing a marijuana dispensary, according to family members. Mother and son were admitted to the same hospital, their rooms nearby. They would video chat or call each other every day. "He would tell me he loved me very much and that he wanted me to get better and that he was doing fine, but he was telling me that so I wouldn't worry," Mercedes Ramos said in Spanish, her voice breaking. She has since returned to her job picking strawberries. Gaps in vaccination rates in the U.S. also persist, with Blacks and Hispanics lagging behind, said Samantha Artiga of the Kaiser Family Foundation, a nonpartisan health-policy research organization.

(Continued On Page C7-2)

Southern
DAILY Make
Today
Different

COMMUNITY

Continued from page C7-1

Hispanics Are Dying At The Highest Rate

United States COVID-19 Deaths Now At 660,000

A memorial for Jerry Ramos sits at his home in Watsonville, Calif., Sunday, June 6, 2021. (AP Photo/Nic Coury)

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, Southern Daily Editor

Experts say several factors could be at work, including deep distrust of the medical establishment among Black Americans because of a history of discriminatory treatment, and fears of deportation among Latinos, as well as a language barrier in many cases. The U.S. was averaging about 870,000 injections per day in early June, down sharply from a high of about 3.3 million a day on average in mid-April, according to the CDC. Initial vaccine eligibility policies, set by states, favored older Americans, a group more likely to be white. Now, everyone over 12 is eligible, but obstacles remain, such as concerns about missing work because of side effects from the shot. "Eligibility certainly does not equal access," Artiga said. "Losing a day or two of wages can have real consequences for your family. People are facing tough decisions like that." The AP's analysis of the outbreak's racial and ethnic patterns was based on National Center for Health Statistics data on COVID-19 deaths and 2019 Census Bureau population estimates.

It's less clear who is dying now, but the still-incomplete data suggests a gap has emerged again. In Michigan, Black people are 14% of the population but accounted for 25% of the 1,064 deaths reported in the past four weeks, according to the most recent available state data. Similar gaps were seen in Florida and Pennsylvania. "For people of color like myself, we've had deep personal experiences during the pandemic" of caring for loved ones and sometimes losing them, said Yolanda Ogbolu, a nurse researcher at the University of Maryland, Baltimore. (Courtesy <https://apnews.com/>)

Related
600,000 Painful U.S. COVID-19 deaths Leave a Swath Of Misery

Across The Country

The United States has now lost over 600,000 mothers, fathers, children, siblings and friends to COVID-19, a painful reminder that death, sickness and grief continue even as the country begins to return to something resembling pre-pandemic normal. A bride forced by the pandemic to have a Zoom wedding is planning a lavish in-person anniversary celebration this summer, but all of the guests must attest they are vaccinated. A Houston artist, still deep in grief, is working on a collage of images of people who died in her community. Others crowd theaters and bars, saying it is time to move on. "There will be no tears - not even happy tears," said Ali Whitman, who will celebrate her first wedding anniversary in August by donning her gown and partying with 240 vaccinated friends and family members in New Hampshire. COVID-19 nearly killed her mother. She spent her wedding day last year with 13 people in person while an aunt conducted the ceremony via Zoom. "I would be remiss not to address how awful and how terrible the past year has been, but also the gratitude that I can be in a singular place with all the people in my life who mean so much to me," said Whitman, 30. The United States passed 600,000 COVID-19 deaths on Monday, about 15% of the world's total coronavirus fatalities of around 4 million, a Reuters tally shows. @reuters As death rate slows, U.S. exceeds 600,000 COVID-19 fatalities <http://reut.rs/2TqZMHE>

The rate of severe illness and death has dropped dramatically as more Americans have become vaccinated, creating something of a psychological whiplash that plagues the millions whose lives have been touched by the disease. Many are eager to emerge from more than a year of sickness and lockdown, yet they still suffer - from grief, lingering symptoms, economic trauma or the isolation of lockdown. "We've all lived through this awful time, and all of us have been affected one way or another," said Erika Stein, who has suffered from migraines, fatigue and cognitive issues since contracting COVID-19 last fall. "My world flipped upside down in the last year and a half - and that's been hard." Stein, 34, was active and fit, working as a marketing executive and fitness instructor in Virginia outside Washington, D.C., before the initial illness and related syndrome known as long-COVID ravaged her life. Like many, she has mixed feelings about how quickly cities and states have moved to lift pandemic restrictions and re-open.

'FOR MY FAMILY, THERE IS NO NORMAL'
In New York, social worker Shyvonne Noboa still cries talking about the disease that ravaged her family, infecting 14 out of 17 relatives and killing her beloved grandfather. She breaks down when she goes to Target and sees the well-stocked aisles, recalling the pandemic's depths, when she could not find hand sanitizer to protect her family. "New York City is going back to quote-unquote 'normal' and opening up, but I can assure you that for my family there is no normal," said Noboa, who lives in Queens, an early epicenter of the U.S. outbreak. She is vaccinated but still wears a mask when she is out, and plans to continue doing so in the near future. In Houston, artist Joni Zavitsanos started looking up obituaries of people in Southeast Texas who had died in the pandemic's early days, reading their stories and creating mixed-media memorials displaying their names and photographs. Around each person she painted a halo using gold leaf, an homage to the Byzantine art of the Greek Orthodox church she attends. Zavitsanos has now created about 575 images, and plans to keep going, making as many as she can, each portrait on an eight-by-eight-inch piece of wood to be mounted together to form an installation. Her brother and three adult children contracted COVID-19 and recovered. A very close friend nearly died and is still struggling with rehabilitation. Chris Kocher, who founded the support and advocacy group COVID Survivors for Change, urged sympathy and support for people who are still grieving. "We're being given this false choice where you can open up and celebrate, or you need to be locked down in grief," he said. "Let's be thankful that people are getting vaccinated, but let's also acknowledge that going back to normal is not an option for millions of Americans." One way to acknowledge the toll that COVID-19 has taken is to incorporate the color yellow into celebrations and gatherings, or display a yellow heart, which for some has become a symbol of those lost to the disease, he said. The bittersweet mix of grief at the pandemic's toll with relief brought by its ebb was clear at Chicago's O'Hare airport on Thursday, where Stephanie Aviles and her family waited for a cousin to arrive from Puerto Rico. Aviles, 23, lost two close friends to the virus, and her father nearly died. And yet, here she was, greeting family she had not been able to see for 15 months as the pandemic raged. "I'm grateful, but it's a lot," she said. "It's a strange feeling to be normal again." (Courtesy <https://www.reuters.com/world>)