With market at record highs, eyes on reports from chipmakers

NEW YORK (Reuters) - Reports from Netflix, Intel and Texas Instruments next week may hint at what is to come in the December quarterly earnings season, with some investors wary of possible danger signs that could knock Wall Street after its latest surge to record highs. The S&P 500 has gotten off to a strong start in January, up 3% so far this year, fueled by a truce in the U.S.-China trade war, low interest rates and signs the economy remains healthy. Analysts on average expect reports to show S&P 500 earnings per share fell 0.8% in the fourth quarter, with technology earnings seen up 0.6%, according to IBES data from Refinitiv. Investors are looking beyond fourth-quarter results at what companies may say about outlooks and plans for investment in light of the recently signed Phase 1 trade deal between Washington and Beijing. Earnings estimates for the fourth quarter have already weakened slightly in the latest week as initial reports from big banks and a smattering of other companies filtered in. "Most of the rally we had in 2019 was in anticipation of better earnings in 2020," said Willie Delwiche, an investment strategist at Baird in Milwaukee. "Rather than getting caught up in what the Q4 numbers are, the attention will be on what - if any - revisions you get to Q1 and Q2 numbers." Analyst estimates for quarterly earnings tend to decline as any given quarter approaches, and any hint that estimates for 2020 are bucking that trend would be positive, Delwiche said.

The S&P information technology index .SPLRCT, which includes such market heavyweights as Apple (AAPL.O), Intel (INTC.O) and Microsoft (MSFT.O), has led Wall Street so far in 2020 with a nearly 6% gain. It is up 50% over the past year, the strongest performer over that period. The index is now trading at 22 times expected earnings, its highest multiple since around early 2005, according to Refinitiv's Datastream. The S&P 500 is trading at about 18 times expected earnings, similar to levels it briefly hit two years ago. "There's going to be heightened attention to guidance to increase comfort levels with valuations, given the strength we've seen in the last two months in the majority of tech names," said Michael James, managing director of equity trading at Wedbush Securities in Los Angeles. Because of that, "you're more likely to see slight disappointments punished more severely than positive guidance is rewarded," he added. Underscoring the importance of results from Intel on Thursday and Apple on Jan. 28, the information technology sector is expected to have accounted for nearly 22% of total S&P 500 operating earnings in the last quarter of 2019, according to S&P Dow Jones Indices. "For a lot of the tech names, they seem to be well positioned for 2020," said Rick Meckler, partner, Cherry Lane Investments, a family investment office in New Vernon, New Jersey. Still, in the market overall, "What has happened is the multiples expanded. And that's really the risk of the market."

Technology earnings growth for 2020 is estimated at 10.4%, which is expected to contribute 2.0 percentage points to the S&P 500's expected growth rate of 9.7%, according to Refinitiv's data, which would make tech the largest contributor. Netflix's (NFLX.O) quarterly report on Tuesday after the bell will show how well the video streaming giant is withstanding a wave of competition led by entertainment heavyweight Walt Disney Co (DIS.N). Netflix shares stumbled last year on worries over slowing subscriber growth and ballooning costs of high-budget productions such as The Crown and The Irishman. Its shares are down nearly 8% since April 2019, when Disney+ was unveiled. Disney's stock has risen 24% since then. Netflix shares tend to be volatile after it reports results, which could be the case again. Netflix options imply a 7.6% swing for the shares in either direction by next Friday, Jan. 24. Over the last eight quarters, on average, the shares moved 6% after the company reported results, according to Trade Alert. U.S. will look at sudden acceleration com-plaints involving 500,000 Tesla vehicles

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) said Friday it will review a petition asking the agency to formally investigate and recall 500,000 Tesla Inc vehicles over sudden unintended acceleration reports.

The petition covers 2012 through 2019 model year Tesla Model S, 2016 through 2019 Tesla Model X, and 2018 through 2019 Tesla Model 3 vehicles, the agency said. The petition cites “127 consumer complaints to NHTSA involving 123 unique vehicles. The reports include 110 crashes and 52 injuries,” the agency added.

Late Friday, NHTSA released a redacted version of the lengthy petition that said “Tesla vehicles experience unintended acceleration at rates far exceeding other cars on the roads” and urged NHTSA “to recall all Model S, Model X and Model 3 vehicles produced from 2013 to the present.” The petition cited media reports of crashes attributed to unintended acceleration and complaints filed with NHTSA.

Tesla did not immediately comment Friday.

Many of the complaints report sudden acceleration incidents when attempting to park vehicles in a garage or at a curb. Others claimed the sudden acceleration happened while in traffic or when using driver assistance systems and led to crashes

In one complaint, a driver said a 2015 Tesla Model S 85D in California was closed and locked when he claimed “a few moments later the vehicle started accelerating forward towards the street and crashed into a parked car.”

A Tesla driver in Avondale, Pennsylvania, was pulling into a parking spot at an elementary school when the vehicle accelerated on its own, the complaint said adding: “It went over a curb and into a chain link fence.”

Another complaint said a Tesla driver in Andover, Massachusetts was approaching her garage door “when the car suddenly lurched forward: and “went through the garage door destroying two garage doors.” The Tesla stopped when it hit the garage’s concrete wall.

In October, the agency said it was reviewing whether Tesla should have recalled 2,000 of its electric cars in May instead of issuing a software upgrade to fix a potential defect that could have resulted in battery fires in Model S and Model X vehicles from the 2012-2019 model years. FILE PHOTO: A Tesla Model S steering wheel is on display at the Canadian International AutoShow in Toronto, Ontario, Canada, February 13, 2019. REUTERS/Mark Blinch The 2,000 vehicles covered by the September petition to the NHTSA received a battery management software upgrade in May in response to a potential flaw that could trigger non-crash-related fires. A lawyer who filed the petition, Edward Chen, told Reuters in October that he strongly believes “this number is much larger than 2,000.” The review is ongoing.

Last week, NHTSA said it was probing the Dec. 29 crash of a Tesla Model 3 that left a passenger dead after the vehicle collided with a parked fire truck in Indiana.

Job Prospects For Blacks
Are On The Rebound

Compiled And Edited By John T. Robbins, Southern Daily Editor

Job prospects are finally rising for people of color in the U.S., a development with big implications for 2020 political races. African-Americans, Hispanics, Latinx and others left behind are finally starting to reap rewards from the economic boom. And in a major shift, the Federal Reserve is listening to people who say the central bank should use its policies to help sustain the record-long expansion that’s still in the early stages for low-income communities of color.

June’s hiring surge calmed fears that the labor market is rapidly slowing down. But falling jobless rates haven’t caused the usual upswell in wages, and thus, inflation. Low unemployment alongside inflation near the Fed’s target is typically a trigger for the central bank to raise interest rates, but this dynamic hasn’t occurred.

In an unprecedented series of events called “Fed Listens,” Chairman Jerome Powell and colleagues are hearing from community leaders who say their residents were hit hardest by the recession. They’re being told that economic growth needs to continue so that people in impoverished neighborhoods can see the same benefits as wealthy whites.

Poor people and people of color tend to be “the first ones into the recession and the last ones out,” Rachel Flum, executive director of the Economic Progress Institute, tells Axios.

One of the people who talked to the Fed in Chicago about the on-the-ground experience was Maurice Jones, CEO of Local Initiatives Support Corporation. “For folks in the neighborhood that are disinvested or underinvested, the prolonged low unemployment is what gives them a chance to get jobs,” Jones tells Axios. “What we’re getting now is businesses that are coming to us” because companies need employees.

The labor force participation rate for African-Americans — which counts both people with jobs and those who are actively looking for work — has been catching up to the labor force participation rate for whites at a rapid pace, reflecting optimism about prospects for employment.

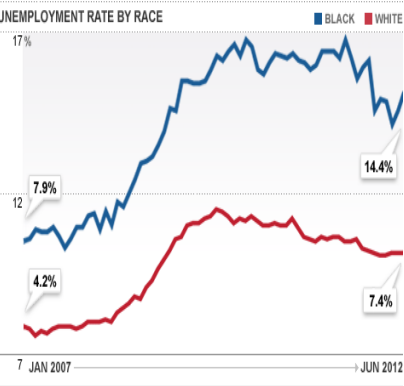

Minority women in particular, as the New York Times notes, have started to notch gains in the labor market as the expansion continues.

But pay hasn’t picked up much. Wage growth, which has accelerated in recent months, pales in comparison to previous economic expansions. And that doesn’t bode well for inflation, which has undershot the Fed’s 2% target, supporting the argument that the Fed should let the economy run a bit hotter for longer.

And the unemployment rate for white people is still far lower than the rates for African-Americans, Hispanics and Latinx, though the gap has been shrinking. The Fed’s next listening session will be July 16 in Atlanta, weeks before the FOMC convenes on July 30 for a highly-anticipated meeting that may result in the first interest rate cut since 2008. Black People Are Returning Faster Now
Into The Workforce

Jobless black people are taking full-time work at a higher rate than unemployed whites, amid a more favorable economy for a population whose prospects have historically been dimmer than for other races.

The data, reflected in the chart above, suggest a greater willingness by jobless black people to accept relatively low wages, while many whites continue to sit out the sizzling economy.

The 3.7% U.S. unemployment rate is at a whopping 49-year low, according to the September jobs report released today by the government. It was the 96th straight month of job gains, a new record.

Among black people, the unemployment rate ticked down to 6% from 6.3% the previous month. And here’s another, less-talked about statistic:

The share of the employed black population is converging closer to whites than it’s been since the government began tracking the metric in 1972.

Historically, joblessness disappears faster for whites, so the length of the economic recovery — the second-longest in history — is also key.

The population we’re talking about is non-institutionalized, but if it did include people in prison, the percentages might be even closer, since the rate of black people in prison is falling.

This dynamic — the convergence of the white and black employment-to-population ratios — is occurring despite wages not growing as much as they could be, said William Spriggs, chief economist at the AFL-CIO. Last month, average hourly earnings grew 2.8% from the same month last year. But pay for black Americans is still significantly less than other races.

One example: Median weekly earnings for white, full-time workers is $907, while black Americans made $683, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

“We are responding to low wages, but white people aren’t,” Spriggs told Axios.

“There is some truth to the fact that if it’s difficult to get a job or secure a job in a good or bad economy, you’re not going to be extremely overly picky about it,” said Valerie Wilson, director of the Economic Policy Institute’s Program on Race, Ethnicity, and the Economy.

Onique Morris, who is also black, accepted a teaching position at New York-based P.S. 79 without shopping around for a better salary. “I would have taken it no matter what the pay was,” said Morris, who is studying for a master’s degree in education.

Black American unemployment is close to historic lows, but remains almost double that of white unemployment, which is at 3.3%. Still, black people are locking down more jobs or at least feeling confident enough to try. (Courtesy axios.com)

Today Is Martin Luther King Jr. Day

Today is the observance of the national holiday honoring the life and legacy of slain civil rights leader and advocate for nonviolent social change Martin Luther King Jr. The holiday falls on the third Monday of January, near King's Jan. 15 birthday. He was born in 1929. This month is the 91st anniversary of his birth. Martin Luther King Jr. dedicated his life to the nonviolent struggle for racial equality in the United States. The third Monday in January marks Martin Luther King Jr. Day, a U.S. holiday that honors King's legacy and challenges citizens to engage in volunteer service in their communities.

Beginning the journey Born on January 15, 1929, to a long line of Baptist ministers, King grew up in Atlanta at a time when Jim Crow laws made segregation and discrimination a daily reality for blacks in the South. King attended Morehouse College in Atlanta, where he came to view religion as a powerful catalyst for social change. He received his doctorate from Boston University's School of Theology before returning to the South, where he served as pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, Alabama. Today, King's Atlanta birthplace is registered as a National Historic Site with the National Park Service.

campaign touched off when seamstress Rosa Parks was arrested after refusing to give up her seat on a bus to a white passenger. After the Supreme Court overturned Alabama's bus segregation laws in 1956, King co-founded the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and promoted nonviolent action for civil rights throughout the South. He was influenced by the teachings of Mahatma Gandhi and traveled to India in 1959.

An iconic figure of the 1960s Joining his father as co-pastor of the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta, King continued to use his oratorical gifts to urge an end to segregation and legal inequality. Throughout the 1960s, he was arrested during nonviolent protests in Alabama, Florida and Georgia. While incarcerated after one such arrest, in 1963, King penned the Letter from Birmingham City Jail, outlining the moral basis for the civil rights movement. That August, he delivered his famous "I Have a Dream" speech to more than 200,000 people gathered on the National Mall in Washington. March 7, 1965, became known as Bloody Sunday because voting-rights marchers were beaten by state troopers and civilians as they crossed the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Selma, Alabama. The violence turned them back, but the ordeal led King to call for another, longer march (pictured) — an 87-kilometer-long, Selma-to-Montgomery march for voting rights.

Civil rights victories In 1964, President Lyndon Johnson signed the Civil Rights Act, which banned discrimination in employment, public accommodations and other aspects of life. King attended the signing of the act into law (pictured). He continued to press for a law to ensure that blacks could not be denied the right to vote by discriminatory practices such as literacy tests, and, in 1965, Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act. King received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964.

In the wake of assassination On April 4, 1968,

King was assassinated on the balcony outside his Memphis, Tennessee, hotel room. At his funeral, thousands of mourners marched through Atlanta behind a mule-drawn wagon bearing his coffin. In a posthumously published essay titled "A Testament of Hope," King urged black Americans to continue their commitment to nonviolence, but also cautioned that "justice for black people cannot be achieved without radical changes in the structure of our society."

King's legacy: Nonviolent protest

In a 1959 radio address during his visit to India, King said: "Today we no longer have a choice between violence and nonviolence; it is either nonviolence or nonexistence." His philosophy was inspired by Gandhi's nonviolent action to end British rule in India. In his turn, King inspired others to change their societies through nonviolent means, from the Solidarity movement's cracking of Soviet occupation in Poland to Nelson Mandela's struggle to end apartheid in South Africa.

King's legacy: Fighting prejudice During the 1963 March on Washington, King declared that all people should be judged not "by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character." The King Center in Atlanta is a living memorial to King's vision of a free and equal world dedicated to expanding opportunity, fighting racism and ending all forms of discrimination.

King's legacy: Pursuing social justice

The Martin Luther King Jr. Research and Education Institute at Stanford University is home to the King Papers

Project, a comprehensive collection of all of King's speeches, correspondence and other writings. The institute is also involved with the Liberation Curriculum Initiative and the Gandhi-King Community, both of which use King's life and ideas to connect social activists around the world working to promote human rights.

King's legacy: Service to others

President Obama and first lady Michelle Obama paint Martin Luther King Jr. quotes as part of a volunteer community service project. In the U.S., Martin Luther King Day is designated a national day of service. Americans are urged to celebrate "a day on, not a day off" in honor of King's commitment to improving the lives of others. President Obama promotes volunteerism as a way to help meet the challenges facing our world.

Keeping the dream alive

A national memorial to King was built near the Lincoln Memorial, where King delivered his "I Have a Dream" speech. The memorial invites visitors to reflect on King's life and legacy. (Courtesy shareamerica.gov) (© AP images)

《唐探》五年 王寶強：唐仁是生活的強者

近日，電影《唐人街探案3》舉行了壹場新春家宴，《唐探》系列的主創們齊聚，壹起回顧五年來的成長與變化，十分溫馨感動。隨後，王寶強發布了壹條微博長文，細數難忘的拍攝經歷，以及出演“唐仁”的心路歷程，感慨“唐仁是陪伴我最久的角色”。

王寶強在文中還提到了，電影《唐人街探案》開機前，自己受傷，全劇組都在等他的經歷。據悉，陳思誠在創作劇本時，“唐仁”這個角色就是為好兄弟王寶強量身打造的。果不其然，王寶強第壹次看到劇本，就笑得不行，當場決定出演。沒想到的是，在開機前王寶強意外腿骨骨折。陳思誠就在劇組已經到達泰國的情況下，壹直沒有開機，天天跑醫院送湯。王寶強也為劇組著急，未等完全恢復就進了組。這份《士兵突擊》時結下的兄弟

情，十幾年過去未曾改變，看得人十分感動。

王寶強也坦言，壹開始“對《唐探》這種喜劇加探案的形式也摸不準，不知道觀眾接不接受”。如今，《唐探》系列被這麼多觀眾認可，壹路走來，實屬不易。王寶強也感謝了壹前幕後的主創和影迷，“希望這個系列能壹直拍下去，走遍世界各地的唐人街！”
